Invitation: July 29 Presidential Lecture

July 23, 2010

Dear Students,

As I mentioned in my email last week, I will deliver the second lecture in this summer's Presidential Lecture Series, on the importance of developing "habits of the mind," at 4 p.m. on Thursday, July 29 in the Hopkins Center's Moore Theater.

The "habits of mind" I will speak of are qualities essential for your success as students and for a lifetime of leadership. I will examine how insights from a variety of academic fields can be used to enhance Dartmouth's liberal arts experience and help students develop the skills to positively affect the global community.

The Presidential Lecture Series was launched last Friday, July 16 with New York City Mayor Michael R. Bloomberg. Mayor Bloomberg encouraged you to cultivate four of his own "habits of the mind": independence, innovation, generosity, and preparation.

Seating in Moore Theater is limited, and students will be given priority. Doors will open at 3:30 p.m. on Thursday, July 29 for students and faculty. General admission will begin at 3:45 p.m., and some seats for students will be held until just before the lecture begins.

I hope to see you next Thursday.

Sincerely,

Jim Yong Kim
